PARADIGMS OF THE IRREGULAR VERBS.

GENERAL REMARKS.

1. Do regularly precedes the Imperfect, Preterite, Conditional and verbal noun and also forms part of certain irregular verbs but is often omitted; it is sometimes used in the present as a simple relative often replaced by a.

2. A special relative form in -r is often used in Connaught and sometimes in the other provinces in the 3 s. of the present (-ar, -ear) and future (-far, -fear). In the present r is often added to the ordinary 3 s., e.g. bíonnr; verbs in the simple relative are regularly aspirated.

3. The Passive or Autonomous regularly escapes aspiration in the relative and after má and ní but often aspiration is used.

4. The verb ir has no synthetic forms; all other verbs have both synthetic and analytic forms; the former are usual except in the 3 s. and 2 pl., but the latter are common in the dependent (i.e. with ní, an, gc.; má takes the absolute form of the verb).

5 (a). The termination -e, -a, as alternative to -ir, -air (2 s.) is sometimes met with; and -tí, -taí, or -tí, -taí are alternative to the analytic form with rib. Examples noted are:—An gcluine rú? do you hear that! an gcloirtí! really! (do ye hear!); cad deire? what do you say? an mar rin atáthaí (-aoi)? is that the way ye are?

(b). The old 3 s. termination -aid, -id is found in late texts and in U. where -ann, -eann is treated as Habitual Present; al. in 3 s. pret.

(c). Early -am, -eam, still occasionally replaces 1*st pl.* -aimíd esp. in poetry and in the imperative, e.g., déanfam, we will do; bíom, let us be; -aimíd also sometimes replaces -aimír in the imperative.

(d). Future Passive or Autonomous, -far, -fear is often replaced by -faidear, -fidear, esp. in Connaught; oft. -tar (-tear) for -tar (-tear) in pres.

6. The past participle, participle of necessity, and participial adjective end in -ta (-te), -tha (-the) and are sometimes distinguished, e.g., p. a. cuirthe, fágtha; p. nec. cuirthe, fágthe.

7. Adjectives in -ach (sometimes -arach) derived from p. a. of verbs have the force of verbal adjectives of which réamhtrach (See Dictionary) is an example.

8. A decided tendency towards regularisation exists in regard to the irregular verbs.

The Irish Texts Society, founded in 1898, is established to advance public education by promoting the study of Irish Literature, and as ancillary thereto to publish texts in the Irish language, accompanied by such introductions, English translations, glossaries and notes as may be deemed desirable.

Membership is open to individuals and Libraries.

The Annual Subscription is £3·00 payable on the 1st January.

Members whose subscription is not in arrear receive a copy free of each new volume when published. In years in which no volume is published, members may select against their subscription any earlier volume still in print.

Members whose current subscription has been paid can obtain back volumes at £3·00 each from the Honorary Secretary.

Non-members can obtain the Society's volumes from The Educational Company of Ireland, Ltd., Ballymount Road, Walkinstown, Dublin 12, Ireland at £4·00 each or from any bookseller.

The Council makes a strong appeal to all interested in the preservation and publication of Irish Manuscripts to join the Society.

Please note address:
All communications should be addressed to The Hon. Secretary, Irish Texts Society, c/o National Bank Ltd., 15 Whitehall, London, S.W. 1.

The Irish Texts Society, founded in 1898, is established to advance public education by promoting the study of Irish Literature, and as ancillary thereto to publish texts in the Irish language, accompanied by such introductions, English translations, glossaries and notes as may be deemed desirable.

Membership is open to individuals and Libraries.

The Annual Subscription is £3·00 payable on the 1st January.

Members whose subscription is not in arrear receive a copy free of each new volume when published. In years in which no volume is published, members may select against their subscription any earlier volume still in print.

Members whose current subscription has been paid can obtain back volumes at £3·00 each from the Honorary Secretary.

Non-members can obtain the Society's volumes from The Educational Company of Ireland, Ltd., Ballymount Road, Walkinstown, Dublin 12, Ireland at £4·00 each or from any bookseller.

The Council makes a strong appeal to all interested in the preservation and publication of Irish Manuscripts to join the Society.

Please note address:
All communications should be addressed to The Hon. Secretary, Irish Texts Society, c/o National Bank Ltd., 15 Whitehall, London, S.W. 1.
